

WOMAN CHAMPION BEEFSTEAK EATER

Mrs. George Schaefer Said to Have Devoured Eleven and Three-quarter Pounds of Porterhouse in 55 Minutes.

WASHED DOWN BY OLD ALE AND CHAMPAGNE PUNCH.

Contest Held at Harlem Occidental Club Dinner, Which Cost $1,000—Nine Women Were Left in Final Contest.

It takes more than a mere trifle like eleven and three-quarter pounds of good porterhouse steak to put Mrs. George Schaefer out of business.

Thursday night, at the beefsteak dinner of the Harlem Occidental Club to the ladies of the organization, Mrs. Schaefer won the championship for consuming the largest quantity of steak in the shortest time limit. The record was eleven and three-quarter pounds in fifty-five minutes.

But the eating of the steak was a bagatelle to Mrs. Schaefer. Her husband, George Schaefer, who once ran for Alderman of the district, and who has ever since borne the honorary title, is a butcher by profession, and it was, in fact, from the meat market over which he presides that the steaks and chops for the feast were obtained.

Mr. Schaefer is the official butcher of the club; so, possibly, because of long practice and on account of a full realization of the worth and excellence of the meat set before her, Mrs. Schaefer was enabled to outstrip her companions.

But, to do the lady full justice, it must be stated that with the steak disappeared half a dozen rolls, two English chops, celery and ice cream, accompanied by copious draughts of old ale, numerous glasses of champagne punch and coffee. The prize was a bottle of champagne, which Mrs. Schaefer also disposed of very comfortably.

The dinner lasted from 8 o'clock Thursday night until 6 o'clock Friday morning, interspersed by dancing and a vaudeville entertainment; yet, when a reporter from The Evening World called upon Mrs. Schaefer yesterday at her home, No. 306 Lenox avenue, the dauntless eater of beef was found as fresh and blooming as though all-night symposiums were things undreamed of in her career.

She had been making some calls in the neighborhood and was just ready to start out on another expedition.

Mrs. Schaefer, it may be stated, is a pleasing and youthful-looking mother of five children, ranging from ten years to eighteen months. She weighs about 150 pounds.

"Fred?" she said. "Well, I should say not. I wish it were all to do over again to-night. We had simply a grand time. No, I didn't feel any bad effects at all. I danced all night after we finished the dinner."

"You see, this contest business was an impromptu affair. The dinner was arranged by the men members of the club, to be given to the ladies so that they could see just what a real beefsteak dinner was like. Then, after we got started, some one suggested that we should have a race to see who could eat the most in the shortest time."

"The men were waiting on us, you know, with butchers' aprons tied around them. There were hired waiters, too, of course."

"You see, there were five hundred women there, all with good appetites, and the food was fine.

"The dinner was served in the basement. The billiard tables were used to set the things on as they were brought in; but we had no tables—just sat around on old boxes and had no knives or forks."

"Each lady was given a fine linen apron, trimmed with lace and with a bib on which were embroidered the initials of the club, H. O. C. These aprons were souvenirs of the occasion. The steak was served to us on wooden plates, covered with oiled paper to prevent the juice from soaking through. We had paper napkins."

"How the Steak Was Served."

"The steaks were six inches thick, broiled very rare and cut through in slices. Each piece was laid on a half of a roll, which had been first soaked in a particularly delicious gravy made of the juice of the meat, Worcestershire sauce, and I don't know what else—it is a secret of the chef's."

"By the way, one of the members of the club acted as chef, having had much experience in broiling beefsteaks and being considered an adept at the business. He was Charles Carroll, son of James W. Carroll, Clerk of the Supreme Court."

"Mr. Carroll, sir, made the punch—and good punch it was," said Mrs. Schaefer.

Here her husband, "Alderman" Schaefer, stepped in.

"That steak ought to have been good. I had it specially selected and hanging in my chill-room for two months. It was just right—so tender it would melt in your mouth."

"There were eleven men cutting the steaks for the rolls," continued Mrs. Schaefer, and when it came to the contest there was one man cutting for each woman. I had Henry Dietz carving for me. He is the most expert carver in the city, and often serves in that capacity when there is a lot of meat to be cut."

"There were nine women left, it seems, in the final contest. Mrs. Toohy, Tippling the scales at 275 pounds, yet considered the champion waltzer of the club, came close to being champion steak eater as well—her record being 10 1/2 pounds consumed in fifty-eight minutes."

Mrs. Carroll came next with 9 pounds; Mrs. Parker, 8 1/2; Mrs. Metz, 7 1/2; Mrs. Daniel Sullivan, 7; Mrs. Edward Walsh, 6 1/2; Mrs. Moran, 5; and Miss May McClellan, 4.

The president of the club, Daniel E. Dowling, assisted by a committee composed of Harry Metz, Edward Run-

PRETTY SINGER ACCUSES MAN

Mrs. Anita Lloyd, Whose Husband Is Said to Be Connected with the District-Attorney's Office, Has Man Arrested.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 13.—A young and pretty singing teacher named Mrs. Anita Lloyd, who recently opened a studio in this city and who is said to have claimed that her husband is connected with the District-Attorney's office of New York, has caused the arrest here of a man who bears the name of J. Townsend Thorpe and whose cards describe him as a representative of the "Compiling Department of the Scientific American, New York."

The complaints she has filed accuse the prisoner of swearing at her, threatening to take her life and with being a "suspicious character." In addition to this trouble, the Powhattan Hotel has filed complaint charging him with failure to pay his board bill.

Thorpe is all of fifty years old. He dresses in good style and has a refined bearing. His manners have won for him many friends. He has told some of them that he has known his fair accuser for some time, but it was untrue, he declared, that he had ever sworn at her or threatened to take her life.

Mrs. Lloyd came to Richmond alone. She has a splendid voice, which has been heard in several churches, and as a result she has enjoyed the patronage of a number of fashionable pupils. The police received a message from New York last night which purported to come from Mrs. Lloyd's husband and which said that he would be here to-day to look after his wife's interests.

Lincoln Car Goes to World's Fair. OMAHA, Feb. 13.—The Union Pacific Railroad to-day shipped the Lincoln private car to St. Louis, where it will become part of the Lincoln Museum at the World's Fair. The car was used by President Lincoln during the civil war, and carried his body to Springfield for burial.

CALVE KEPT THE CURTAIN WAITING

For Thirty Minutes Box Holders at the Metropolitan Opera-House Were Forced to Control Their Impatience.

What has an artist to do with time? If the box-holders became impatient at the half-hour delay before the curtain arose on "Cavalleria Rusticana" they should have remembered that it was Calve, Calve the immortal, Calve the eccentric, Calve the emotional, who was going to sing Santuzza for them.

At 8:15 Calve was wrapped in her fur. Who ever heard of a prima donna like Calve appearing with the appetite for a ballet? A mere ballet!

"Herr Gott!" cried Herr Corried. "Not yet ready, ma'am! The time, it is fifteen minutes past the eight. The curtain is due to arise."

Calve yawned and slowly removed her furs.

"I think it is the ballet should go on first. Calve is of the more importance than Enrico Vassari. 'Cavalleria' the more artistic than a ballet. Not?"

"Acht! But the scenery is arranged," said Herr Corried. "What shall I do! Acht! yes. I shall before the curtain go and tell them the Calve will not sing because the box they are not full."

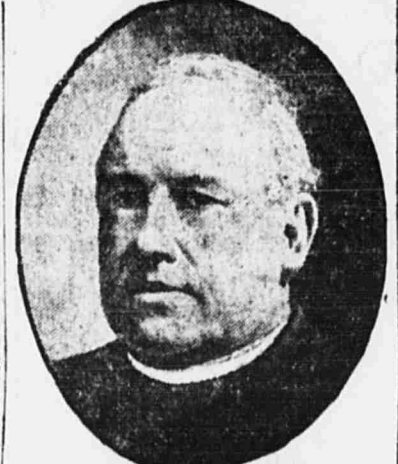

"Calve jumped for the peep-hole in the curtain."

"M'ieu Corried. You are wrong. The box they are full. I shall sing. But it takes time for a prima donna to complete her toilet. Little ribbons have to be tied on such such of ribbons of rouge and powder applied here and there, and it takes time to look in the glass. Especially does it take time, that glass. So it was 8:40 when the curtain arose and Calve began to sing. The audience with the arles of Santuzza. But it was worth the waiting."
